AMERICAN ROUND-THE-WORLD FLIERS IN FRANCE

Daring Aiyators Reach Paris in Their Record-Making Journey

IN triangle formation, the wings of their machines glistening in the brilliant sunlight, and escorted by a guard of honor consisting of eight French military airplanes, the American around-the-world fliers reached Paris on July 14, Bastille Day. They flew directly over the Arc de Triomphe, where the Unknown Soldier is buried, dropped flowers on the monument and brought their hands to their foreheads in salute to their dead comrade in arms. Then they headed for Le Bourget, the airport of Paris, where they landed, to receive a tumultuous greeting from the thousands who had gathered to watch the completion of that lap of their epoch-making flight. All the airmen were in excellent physical condition but very tired. Later they flew to England, where they again had a great reception. Up to July 14 the fliers had covered a distance of 18,035 miles in 118 days. They had actually spent 239 hours and 33 minutes in the air, covering an average of about 75 miles an hour while flying. The transatlantic hop still in store for them includes three open-water jumps—from the Orkney Islands to Iceland, from Iceland to Greenland and thence to Labrador. They are scheduled to leave England this week and are expected to arrive in Boston by Aug. 21, thus completing a 25,000-mile flight that has no parallel in the history of aviation.

HUGE UNDERSEA FIGHTER TAKING THE WATER AT PORTSMOUTH (N. H.) NAVY YARD

The submarine V-1, double the size of any previously constructed for the United States Navy, is the first of a fleet of nine that will be able to accompany the battle fleet at sea in any weather. She is 341 feet 6 inches long over all, with a maximum breadth of 27 feet 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ inches, a surface speed of 21 knots, a speed of 9 knots submerged and a surface displacement of 2,164 tons. She is so nearly self-sustaining that she will not need the services of a mother ship when in port, and can cross the Atlantic and return without replenishing fuel or supplies.

WITH THE NORWEGIAN EXPEDITION THAT SAILED HALF WAY AROUND THE WORLD

Although whaling has lost some of the romance attached to it in the days when the daring mariners of Nantucket and New Bedford plowed their way through the "roaring forties" with scuppers awash, the hunt for the huge monsters of the deep still has a fascination and an epic quality that lure adventurous souls. An attestation of this fact is furnished by the Norwegian expedition of six vessels that sailed half way around the world to test their luck in Antarctic seas. The mother ship was the Sir James Clark Ross of 13,000 tons, named after the famous British explorer, and the largest whaling ship in the world. Although whales were known to exist in Ross Sea, none had ever been hunted or captured. How plentiful the catch would be was problematical, but the success that attended the expedition fully justified the venture. The vessels, often retarded by or caught in icepacks, fought their way as far as Discovery Inlet, a harbor in the Great Ice Barrier, 78 degrees south, found whales in abundance, and returned with so rich a cargo that doubtless other whaling fleets will soon be seeking their share of the wealth of these hitherto virgin seas.
